“I was born in South Yorkshire on the edge of The Dark Peak National Park and grew up in wide open spaces of Brontean proportions. I went on to read Economics at the University and also took a Music degree in London.

“I spent a dozen or so years playing and teaching classical guitar and other areas of music. During this time I also taught myself the art of fine cabinet making and abandoned music to earn my living at this (then) lucrative trade. I became interested in the sculptural aspect of furniture, including carving and other applied decoration. This was so fascinating to me that I concentrated more and more on it and eventually moved on to other materials. Then came Harmony Kingdom.”
