“At the age of 22, I left London for the mountains of Snowdonia in North Wales, where I worked as a shepherd for more than a decade. Understanding the relationship between severe weather conditions, hostile landscapes, free ranging animals and man’s attempts to control them supplied me with the education I had missed.

“After sustaining a back injury, I was forced to give up shepherding; fate took a hand. I went to work for a small company that manufactured replicas for art museums, and it was here that I discovered a dormant talent. At age 35, it came as a real shock that creating things was so important and pleasurable, and that I had lived so long without this artistic outlet. I have been obsessed ever since.”
